Apart from all these considerations, there is the visit of the Annanise Ambassadors to Paris still to be explained. That they went with proposals to buy the French off, there can be no manner of doubt, and we should say may be relied on, that if regard alone to the glory of France rendered their mission bootless, the result would long since have been published for the gratification of the French soldier, and for the elevation of the Enmeror's

H. B. M. Consul (without waiting for an official report of the affair) communicated instantly with the Government Authorities and by his own active conduct endeavoured get any influence to bear there. The French to impart something like energy to that respectable but methodical body. But alas! the Japanese have their own way of dealing with these matters and will adopt none other. The Governor sent his candolences, and his officers duly inspected the shop where the affair occurred but what stens have been taken to apprehend the assassin has not yet transpired. The man's saidal was found close to the spot and this may possibly lead to something, for tinguishing marks on their shoes. With a murderer's boot in his possession we know pretty well what chances of success one of our London detectives would have.
